WHO SHOULD ATTEND:

This course is appropriate for individuals who have a strong interest in developing the facilitation skills used to support increased or improved group collaboration. Social workers, medical professionals, case managers, care professionals, policy makers, and care partners are encouraged to attend.

COURSE OBJECTIVES:

Objective #1: Understand the impact that existing policies and practices for service planning within human service systems have on individual/family choice, control, and self-efficacy.

Objective #2: Develop basic skills related to facilitating person-centered planning, including competency in:

- The Drexler/Sibbet Team Performance Model as it is used to design consumer-directed planning processes.
- Graphic facilitation and the use of visual mapping tools to draw out and organize information about an individual's and family's personal vision, values, capacities, and needs.

- Clarifying goals and developing strategic plans, designing individually tailored support networks, and accessing resources within communities and human service systems.

Objective #3: Learn techniques and strategies for managing interpersonal dynamics within planning teams.

Objective #4: Gain a general working knowledge of primary funding sources and ways to creatively combine sources to develop an individualized budget.

Objective #5: Acquire an understanding of the components of service brokering and strategies for negotiating sustainable service agreements.

Patty Cotton, MEd, has coordinated numerous federally-funded projects with emphasis on model demonstration and system change in adult services. She has extensive background in process facilitation, service brokering, and development of natural support strategies.

Pam McPhee, MSW, is the executive director of the Browne Center and a clinical faculty member at UNH. Her focus is on helping individuals and groups develop their own deliberate culture through inter and intra-personal skills development.
